I understand these may not be tech jobs but I believe by including my work experience in my cover letter will show not only the diversity in job types and job environments iv'e been in but also the adversity and the ability to learn new things and apply what ive learned quickly. My senior year of high school i took and passed a college beginner HTML/CSS class that also taught us javaScript, JQUERY and the DOM it was for early college credits. It is for certain that im in the beginning stages of my coding career but Im a diligent worker and im sincerely eager learn soak up all I can all the time so I believe that im at a stage where I could be working in an industry that I can actually say I enjoy. I've been coding on and off since then but recently these past two years iv'e delved into frontend web developement and making responsive sites and dynamic landing pages, my most recent endeavor was Skillcrush's frontend web development course, I gained a lot out of it like using git command line. Other than that I've mainly self-taught from books ive ordered online, and some of the free boot sites online.
